Key Points

09/07 – 09/13

Thursday

- Widespread thunderstorm activity with abundant lightning and gusty winds will increase the fire weather potential across northern CA
- Smoke from wildfires is resulting in poor air quality, which can result in health impacts, especially in the central valley areas.
- Isolated heavy rain may result in flash flooding across burn scars.

Saturday-Sunday

- An increasing moisture surge may result in increased thunderstorm activity across the southern portions of the state, which will bring flash flood, blowing dust, and fire weather threats

Monday-Tuesday

- Warming trend, with temperatures averaging several degrees above normal

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- A robust weather system ,as expected, moved through Northern California this afternoon and will continue into Thursday. The National Weather Service anticipates numerous thunderstorms which could produce abundant lightning and gusty, erratic winds.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

- <https://alerts-v2.weather.gov/counties/CA>

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Showers and thunderstorms will continue in Northern California today, mainly north of Weaverville in the west, and over the higher terrain throughout the north and east. Thunderstorms will be producing rainfall, but dry strikes and new ignitions will still be possible. As the shower and thunderstorm activity increases later in the day more rainfall will be produced, but the potential for new large fires will still be high enough to consider today a High Risk day due to the current very dry fuels conditions. The showers and thunderstorms will diminish late tonight but return Thursday mainly north of a line from Clear Lake to Truckee. Moderate to heavy rainfall is possible with storms later today and Thursday, with the heaviest activity expected in far northwest Northern California Thursday afternoon. Even with the possible heavy rainfall there will be a high risk of significant fire development in these areas until fuels receive sufficient rainfall to significantly increase fuel moisture.

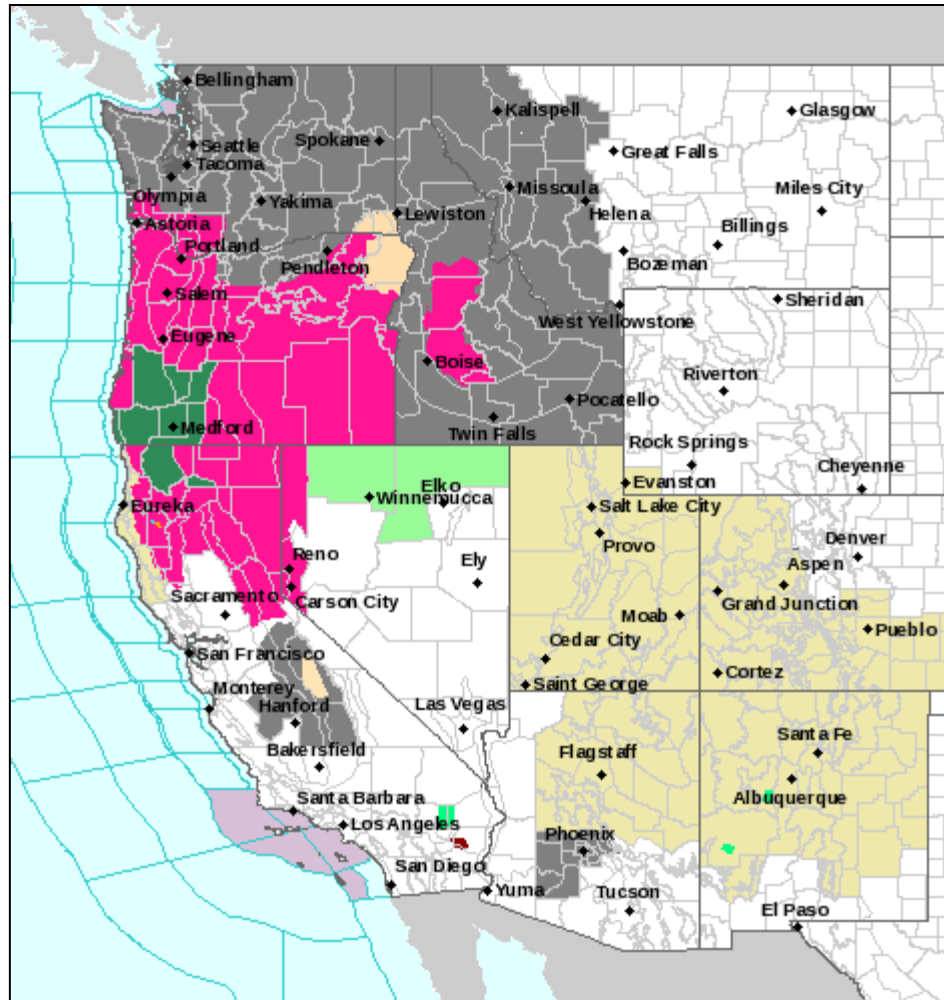

Isolated thunderstorms are expected Friday in many of the same areas. Outflow winds from storms could gust to 40 mph or more, while general winds will be southeast-southwest with gusts to 20-25 mph in open areas each afternoon. Temperatures will be near normal today and humidity will be much higher than in recent days. This weekend looks warmer and drier with light offshore winds as high pressure returns, but more thunderstorms are expected early next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Mid-level moisture will allow for isolated storms to develop this afternoon on desert-adjacent sides of the Cleveland and San Bernardino National Forests. The storms should produce some brief rainfall and dry lightning is not expected. Further north, scattered afternoon convection will be possible in the Sierras, primarily north of Fresno County at elevations above 7,000 feet. Temperatures over the next few days will remain a few degrees above normal with highs in the 70s along the coast to the lower 90s in the valleys to 108 in the desert. Most areas will see relative humidity (RH) remain above 20% during the afternoon hours through the end of the week. Thursday, drier southwesterly flow should keep thunderstorms north and east of the area with only one or two storms expected along the Sierra Crest. But Friday and into the weekend, southerly flow may bring some monsoonal moisture back to Southern California. This may lead to numerous wet storms in the desert with scattered convection possible in the Kern County Mountains and the San Bernardino and Cleveland National Forest. A warming trend can be expected Sunday into early next week with highs possibly reaching 100 in the valleys by Monday. South winds of 15-25 mph will be possible in the Owens Valley and desert areas near the Nevada Border Thursday and Friday. Similar wind speeds from the northwest will be possible near Pt. Conception during the afternoon Thursday. Otherwise, most other areas will see light winds through the middle of next week.
